Pump Block 2

This block is designed to build muscle by increasing the volume of work being done. This doesn't mean using light weights. The movements in this block can be taken as close to failure as possible on the accessory work while still focusing on building strength in the Main Lift (for safety). Form must be maintained with loading on every rep. Cheat reps or poor technique should not be allowed during class. Extra cardio after these sessions will only offset the muscle building effects of the workouts. Coach your members to focus on lower intensity (aka walking) activities to drive fat-burning without over-taxing the central nervous system.

Loading: push each accessory exercise to as close to failure as the member is comfortable while maintaining good form.
